There are probably more prospectors in the camp this year than ever before. There are some properties quite well worked and will command large prices as soon as transportation is in sight,

Within the last two weeks we have seen quite a number of experienced experts in the camp and there have been several sales made to eastern parties.

Husbandman: We are glad to be able to state that the smelter at Castle has been started for a run on Cumberland ore. The Cumberland company have leased the works and are making this run to test whether the smelting can be done profitably or not. The heavy ex-pense of shipping the bullion and the ost of coke is so great that it is doubtful if there will be much profit left. The company has something over 200 tons of ore hauled down to the smelter and are taking out more right along, having ten men engaged in the mine, and we are informed the ore is of a good grade. While we have fears that it may not be profit-able to run the smelter under the unfatime from Queenstown by 3 hours and 49 minutes. The actual time from vorable circumstances, we are greatly in 49 minutes. The actual time from vorable circumstances, we are greatly in popes it may exceed our expectations and be kept running. We believe this work will be economically managed, and if it is possible to do it profitably will be kept running. Medill of the Chicago Tribune.

For three years he has been an outlaw and the terror of the officers and citizens. He made his home in the mountains and coulees, only appearing at intervals to procure provisions and ammunition. When pursued by officers he fled into the fastnesses of an almost impenetrable wilderness, frequently leaving notices nailed to trees, warning his pursuers to halt or suffer the consequences. He came to Washington from Missouri with his father, whose real name was Camp-bell Engel. A reward of $1,000 was offered in Missouri for the apprehension of the old man, who was charged with murder. Constable Hubbard of Spokane located him in the mountains, to the west of the Grand coulee, 130 miles from Spokane, and induced Frank Aiken to
